Crisis Overview

In the early morning hours on March 21st, 2015, an accused convict, Wossen Assaye, was being treated at Inova Fairfax Hospital for an injury. Two private security guards were watching the patient when he managed to grab the gun of one of the guards. A shot went off in the struggle, and the convict was able to escape the hospital. According to law enforcement officials, he was seen chasing people through the halls, gun in hand, wearing only a hospital gown.

Inova Fairfax Hospital immediately went on lockdown. No staff was able to leave or enter the hospital until further word. Administrators at the hospital emailed staff an update alerting them of the emergency lockdown and warned the oncoming shift to remain at home. With hundreds of employees though, many of which were off-shift and still sleeping at home, Inova needed a fast and secure way to relay these critical updates.

Call To Action

Joy Galberth, Inova Fairfax's Case Management Director, was on-shift during the incident and wanted to send updates to her off-shift case managers as soon as possible, but she knew they wouldn't be checking their work emails at 3:00am. She quickly opened the TigerText app and created a distribution group that included all Inova Fairfax Hospital case managers.

Within a matter of minutes, she texted the information sent in the hospital's email updates to her staff and fellow colleagues. She not only provided them with real-time updates on the lockdown situation, but also warned them to stay home and off hospital grounds, ensuring their safety.

“ The hospital was emailing us updates about the escaped and armed patient, but most of us were off-shift at the time. I knew no one would be checking emails that early in the morning! I was one of the individuals on-shift during the lockdown though, and wanted to get the updates out to my staff immediately, before they arrived to work. This is where TigerText came to the rescue. I was able to set up a distribution group, and within a matter of minutes, I was able to relay real-time updates on the situation to my case managers and fellow colleagues ”

- Joy M. Galberth, Sr. Director, Case Management at Inova Fairfax Medical Campus
